Path of the Doom-Seeker

My honour is my life, and without it I am nothing.
I shall seek redemption in the eyes of my ancestors.
I shall become as death to my enemies.
Until I face they that take my life, and with it my shame.
–Ancient and long-forgotten dwarven oath

Barbarians lay about themselves on the battlefield in a mad frenzy, dismissing mortal blows and shattering shields. Some embody ferocious primal totems, endure a maddening curse, or imbibe toxins to reach a hypnotic martial fury.

Others are simply... broken.

These wandering warriors have lost part of themselves: a home, a family, a name. Unable to ever mend their wounds, they walk a path of self-destruction, strewn with bloody rivers.

Their dreams are haunted by the wails of those they failed, and though some may seem normal, even jovial, when the rage comes upon them it does so as the foam atop a tidal wave of grief, crashing down on their enemies with the weeping, snarling force of a warrior bereaved.

Some who walk the path of the doom-seeker die heroes, renowned for bravery by a history that failed to recognize the true nature of their reckless daring. Others are less feted in their falling, remembered as honourless maniacs.

It matters little. In death, they found the peace they sought.

Image Credit: Jordan Allen

Foe-Finder

When you join this path at 3rd level, you commit to seeking out a great and terrible end. You have advantage on Wisdom (Survival) checks to track enemies.

While in an area marked by the regional effects of a creature's lair, you automatically sense that a legendary creature lives nearby. This does not reveal the lair's precise location, or the nature of the creature within.

Death-Darer

Starting at 3rd level, when you enter a rage you can declare a creature you can see to be your doom. You can use a bonus action to move up to your speed toward this target. You must end this move closer to the creature than you started. While you are within 5 feet of the target, it suffers disadvantage on any attack that doesn't target you.

These effects last until your rage ends.

End-Striker

Beginning at 6th level, you can use your reaction when you are damaged by a hostile creature to gain one death-knell. Until the end of your next turn, you gain another knell every time a hostile creature damages you.

You can spend death-knells when you hit a creature with a melee attack, dealing an extra 1d8 damage per knell. You can hold a number of knells up to your rage damage bonus. All unused knells vanish whenever you regain hit points.

If you are raging, you can activate this feature without using your reaction.

Fate-Facer

At 10th level, your fear is overpowered by your shame. While raging, you cannot be frightened, and you can ignore effects that would force you to flee from an enemy, such as a command or fear spell.

You can use your reaction to enter a rage whenever you suffer an effect which would frighten you.

Star-Chaser

Beginning at 14th level, your spirit refuses anything but a glorious redemption. You have resistance to all damage except that inflicted by a hostile creature, whether through attacks, spells, or other means. You also have resistance to all damage inflicted by the target of your Death-Darer feature.

In addition, if you would die of exhaustion, disease, or suffocation, you instead fall unconscious with 1 hit point. You no longer age, and cannot be aged by magic.