Totem Warrior Spirits

The following are additional options for the Totem Warrior primal path.

Totem Spirit

At 3rd level the following animal spirits and features are available to you, in addition to the normal totem options.

Goat. While raging, you gain a ram attack. Your unarmed strike deals 1d6 bludgeoning damage. If you hit a Large or smaller creature with a melee weapon attack when raging, you can make a shove attempt against the target as a bonus action. The spirit of the goat makes you headstrong and hard to stand against.

Lion. While raging, and not incapacitated, creatures can't have advantage on attack rolls against you if there's at least one other creature that's not incapacitated and is allied to you within 5 feet of the attacker.

Monkey. While raging, wielding a versatile weapon with one hand counts as if you were using both (there's no additional benefit using both hands). Alternatively, you can wield a two-handed weapon with only one hand, but you can't use more than one two-handed weapon at a time this way. If your size is small, you have no disadvantage when attacking with heavy weapons while raging, but you must use both hands to wield them. The spirit of the monkey gives you an unmatched grasp.

Aspect of the beast

At 6th level you add the following magical benefits as options for this class feature.

Goat. You gain the resilience and sure-footed nature of a goat. You're acclimated to high altitudes and cold climate and you ignore difficult terrain made from rocks, loose earth, debris and other physical objects.

Lion. You gain the courage and willpower of a lion. You can't be frightened.

Monkey. You gain the agility and mobility of a monkey. You gain a climbing speed equal to your walking speed and add your Dexterity modifier to Strength checks made to climb and jump.

Totemic Attunement

At 14th level you add the following magical benefits as options for this class feature.

Goat. As long as you're not incapacitated, you can't be moved or kocked prone by another creature against your will while raging. Your jumping distance is doubled and you always land on your feet after a jump.

Lion. Once per rage you can use a bonus action after you hit a creature with an attack to emit a powerful roar and encourage your allies. Until the start of your next turn, each creature of your choice within 30 feet of you that can hear the roar adds your rage bonus to damage rolls they make with weapon attacks. Frightened and charmed creatures gain no bonus, but can use their reaction to end any one of those conditions.

Monkey. While raging, you can use a bonus action on your turn to grapple a creature up to one size larger than you when you hit it with a melee weapon attack.